Sarah Palin may happen in Vegas

Norm Clarke

It worked for Ronald Reagan. Maybe Sarah Palin will find the road to the White House runs through Las Vegas.

Invited to do the monologue Tuesday on "The Tonight Show with Jay Leno," the 2008 Republican vice presidential nominee joked that she's "picked up a gig in Las Vegas at the 'Legends' show playing Tiny Fey."

That's okey, dokey with the "Legends in Concert" cast at Harrah's Las Vegas: Cher, Elvis, Michael Jackson, Aretha Franklin, and even a Leno impersonator.

Harrah's will save a spot for her "anytime she is ready," said Rick Mazer, president of Harrah's Las Vegas.

Palin used her stand-up comedy debut to poke fun at herself, including a reference to a recent flap when photos revealed she had written notes on the palm of her hand for a speech. She informed Leno she would do her comedy bit without cue cards, adding, "I will know these jokes like the front of my hand."

Palin said she was looking forward to seeing snowboarder Shaun White, the Olympic gold medalist, on the show.

"Last time I was this close to the 'Flying Tomato' was when someone threw one at me at a book signing," she said. No kidding, she added.

Reagan briefly headlined in Las Vegas in 1954 when he tried to get a song-and-dance career started after his acting career faded.

FASHION STATEMENT

U.S. Senate candidate Sue Lowden discovered Sunday that there's such a thing as being underdressed for a NASCAR race.

Lowden wore jeans to Sunday's Shelby American NASCAR race at the Las Vegas Motor Speedway.

Her schedule included an invitation to the suite of Bruton Smith, owner of the speedway.

After parking her campaign bus in the infield, she was notified that the dress code for the suite prohibited jeans.

Lowden made a Jimmie Johnson-like recovery to salvage the day. By chance, she had a dressier option in the "Sue Mobile," and she made a quick change that would have made any NASCAR pit crew proud.

THE SCENE AND HEARD

Flamingo headliner Marie Osmond is returning to the stage a day after the funeral of her son Michael Bosil. "The Donny & Marie Show" resumes its regular schedule March 9, after a week off because of Bosil's death. The Osmonds have added five show dates, April 13-17. These were previously unscheduled dates. ...

The red carpet for the Reel Awards starts at 5 tonight at the Stratosphere. The event, which costs $25, features top tribute artists and impersonators of stars such as Marilyn Monroe, Michael Jackson, Dame Edna, George W. Bush, Whitney Houston and others.

SIGHTINGS

Siegfried & Roy, honored Wednesday at the closing ceremony of the World Magic Seminar for their sponsorship since 1978. Lance Burton read a proclamation from Gov. Jim Gibbons declaring March 3, 2010, as Siegfried & Roy Day. Penn & Teller added a proclamation from the city of Las Vegas stating March 2010 as Siegfried & Roy Month, as issued by Mayor Oscar Goodman.

THE PUNCH LINE

"People magazine confirmed that former President (Bill) Clinton called Tiger Woods to offer his support. I wonder what he said? I'm not sure which conversation I'd rather hear — Bill and Tiger or Elin and Hillary." — Jimmy Kimmel

Norm Clarke can be reached at (702) 383-0244 or norm@reviewjournal.com. Find additional sightings and more online at www.normclarke.com.

Jeez I hope not. Even though I don't think she's as bad as some people do, I don't think she's presidential material. She too unpredictable.

MIKE WEATHERFORD / LVRJ

A venue that once competed with producer David Saxe's V Theater will soon carry his name at the Miracle Mile Shops at Planet Hollywood.

The Saxe Theater will be the new name for the 435-seater formerly operated by magician Steve Wyrick, who surrendered it to the mall in a December foreclosure. Saxe will now oversee both venues, and hopes to have the new venue up and running by June 1.

Saxe has "a very proven track record with us with the V Theater," says Russ Joyner, the mall's general manager. "While we had a lot of considerations to go through, at the end of the day the right person to do this was right in our backyard."

While the twin operation offers economies of scale, Saxe says few ticket buyers should pick up on the mutual ownership. "The game plan is for it to have its own identity, its own shows, marketed separately."

At this point, Saxe says he would rather produce new titles or cut landlord deals with new performers than move any shows over from the three show spaces inside the V, which runs as many as 17 performances of 10 titles per day. He is considering a flagship title based on the history of Las Vegas entertainment.

"Never say never, but right now I don't want to mess with success" at the original theater, he says. However, "the beauty of running a theater (as a neutral venue) is that if I had a show with a short shelf life we could change it, as opposed to an entertainer buying a theater and putting their name on it. If they don't succeed, what do they do?"

Saxe protested Wyrick's lease with mall officials in 2005. Wyrick opened two years later, but neither his show nor a succession of tenant productions ever caught up to the investment. The theater finally closed in December.

Saxe and Joyner doubt Wyrick's failure carries any stigma for the location. Based on the number of inquiries, neither do prospective producers or performers looking at the space. "Everyone's come out of the woodwork," Saxe says. "You can't say, 'Oh it doesn't work because of the mall, or the economy,' when right down the hall there's a line (for the V Theater)."

This is good news. I'll be surprised though if he can pull it off, but if anyone can he's the one to do it. He's managed to turn the V theater into a valid out of casino location for shows.

I won't say it's impossible as he had success with the V, but it has to be hard to have two operations in the same mall that are yours and competing with each other.

It's all about the experience.

Grand opening at Red Rock visitors center set for today

KEITH ROGERS / LVRJ

When visitors go to Red Rock Canyon today, they'll get more than a breath of fresh air and a sweeping view of the park's signature sandstone cliffs.

For the first time since construction began more than a year ago, the visitors' experience will include outdoor exhibits that bring sturdy replicas of some of the park's most fragile features to the foreground: things such as American Indian rock art panels, desert tortoises in their natural habitat, and a life-size cougar that lurks atop one of the shade walls.

It's all designed so people can touch, feel, see and understand the national conservation area from the perspective of earth, water, fire and air.

"You know the kids are going to just love this," said park spokeswoman Hillerie Patton, who strolled through the colorful, concrete walkways Friday and tested some of the hands-on displays.

One of the walks leads to an observation deck where visitors can study a giant map of the parks trails etched into the floor with photo panels on a railing of what they'll see on the trails and beyond the panoramic view.

"People can learn about this to understand how important it is to conserve it," she said.

For example, did you know that tadpole shrimp thrive in the rock features known as "tinajas" that capture rainwater?

The tiny creatures "lay their eggs in the mud at the bottom of the tinajas. But the eggs cannot hatch until they have completely dried out and the tinaja fills with water again," one display reads.

A contingent of park volunteers, Bureau of Land Management personnel and elected officials will hold a grand opening for the new visitors center and exhibit area at 11 a.m. before public access to the displays begins at 2 p.m. Among the attendees will be Sen. Harry Reid, D-Nev., who championed the effort behind the $23 million visitors center expansion project and the bill that paid for it through the sale of public lands in Southern Nevada.

In a nutshell, "Earth, Water, Fire and Air" brings the park's features to the feet of those who visit the center and later want to explore areas where they exist in nature.

The exhibits offer a glimpse of geology from the death of the supercontinent 250 million to 160 million years ago and of human history going back 10,000 years, including the Old Spanish Trail of the 1800s and Las Vegas today.

An amphitheater with seating for 290 gives lecturers a place to talk, actors a stage to perform and provides a place outside to hold weddings.

Look-alike Teddy Roosevelt actor Joe Wiegand will be at the grand opening today and again Sunday from 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. The admission fee to the park includes access to the visitors center and its outdoor exhibit area.

A vista of Red Rock Canyon's Aztec sandstone cliffs is framed Friday by a shade structure at the park's new visitors center complex.
